

My method is based on the idea from <https://arxiv.org/abs/1509.00552>, to use recurrent neural networks in pixel classification. Due to the computational cost, this first version of implementation is rather simplified and ignoring the dependency of far-separated pixels in the recurrent scenario. I would like to see how this approximation can perform in the task of large image processing. Thank you.